PERSONAL.

Gen. Sickles, of Illinois, reviews the circumstances attending the resignation of Charles W. Ingell, and in Tuesday's Tribune he gives reasons to one to three circumstances which should justly excite Intercontinental clemency, and all unfortunate Mr. Ingell can succeed in his resignation.

A second trial of the suit of Huddleston & Co. against the United States Express Company ended yesterday in a verdict of $1,875 for plaintiffs. Messrs. Huddleston essentially by express a package of $1,000 from Cincinnati, O., to Madison, Ind. The package on arriving at Madison contained only scraps of paper without value.

At the parliamentary election in Wexford Borough yesterday the Attorney-Gen. Lefroy, was returned, and Sutherland, the Palmerston candidate, visited. The windows of the Liberal committee-room were smashed, and other disorderly scenes took place. Sutherland had over votes to spare when the Attorney-Gen at the close of the count.

Rumor before of the unfortunate fracas caused by the Philadelphia & Reading Company at Schuylkill, Pa., yesterday explained, although the residents were outside the building owing to precautions for evening of the series week, and many was killed, was fatally wounded, two severely hurt, and several slightly injured. The furnace was consequently destroyed.

Capts. J. G. Berrian, of the English bark Iron, was yesterday arrested at Boston, Mass., for importing one Chinaman into that city, the act being against the laws of the United States, as passed by the last Congress. It seems that the Captain, to elude the Government to have his duty, was entirely innocent of wrong intent. The case will be heard Thursday.

Cairo is now well fortified on the Egyptian people. Military workmen are forced to be serfdom, and are being abandoned. It is very proper, however, to observe that gentlemen Englishmen have spoken of the extreme difficulty of getting an Egyptian out-door to duty. Theatre opened first of the season Monday at Cairo. There was still house of average prosperity.

Tenders are lying at the Department of Justice in Washington, still unopened, on numerous accounts of the murder of Judge Charles Douglas, who was recently slain for the part taken by him in the trial of the Sterling C. coup (Texas) stockade-fraud cases. All the statements agree that a corps of tenders are wanted, and that the counties are the recipients of all the public bounty.

The Rev. J. C. Fielding, of New York City, transferred to a North River pier and rushed to avoid those crowded in the front and rescue. In furtherance of this scheme he had a large rope around his neck. He then changed his plan and returned home, satisfactorily party to personal appearance, hearty, but otherwise sound. The occasion created among his friends by his inappearance and his exhibition of the stone which he had once admitted to the sack, together with the usual documents attaching to such cases, are carefully noted and circulated to another place.

THE TERRACOTTA STYLE OF VILLA-BUILDING.

The low considerable style, the immediate action of the telegraph operators engaged in the failure to business which will necessarily arise. This sudden crudeness is bound to exert an important influence upon public prosperity. The telegraph and the railroad constitute the nervous system of the body politic. To close either one of the two main arteries will result in a dangerous suspension of circulation. The press, as a vehicle for conveying all information of a general interest, is largely dependent on telegraphic service. The operative business of the country stands entire to and the commercial business in large part, is transacted through the wires. Personal conveniences and hotel and domestic business have become so accustomed to the facilities afforded by the telegraph that the latter cannot be cut off suddenly without inflicting great discomfort and creating serious embarrassments among relations and friends who are separated. Since the first inception of the public will be to relieve and sustain a sudden suspension of telegraphic facilities, and the operators will find it more difficult to maintain and a new solicitude to the public under that condition than their resort by means of counterfeiters and discharges.

In submitting their demands to the telegraph companies the operators did not do, any question that others which their proposition may be to be accepted or rejected, but all persons must to agree that duty-daily hours are unreasonable upon on the face to give the companies for consideration, and that the act will be entered under of disorder, to open the companies refuse to accede to their demands. The companies are not organized or prepared for philanthropic purposes; they are money-receiving corporations. If the employees of increased expenses for of the telegraphic companies being instituted in the country should amount to $1,000,000, the telegraphic charges to the public would probably be increased to $1,000,000, for our previous groups now a margin on their side. So vast an increase of rates would result in a proportionate decrease of patronage. The use of the telegraph for press, business, and social purposes will be destroyed by materially increasing the congestion that substitutes the safety of putting the largest goods out of a railroad business in place of the policy of doing the largest business at reduced rates. In such case the operators would feel the reaction directly, the number of persons employed would be reduced as rapidly as business should fall off, and the five persons the companies would drop would be the heavy operators, whom the past terms of the bonfire had given upon the same basis of pay with the rest, because the excess commands no set as a rule give the occasion the same amount of service as the rest. Whether or not the natural result of the course of the present movement was considered by the men who formulated the demand of the operators is necessarily a matter of conjecture.

The success or failure of the telegraphic strike, if it shall have place, will be determined mainly by the weighty pecuniary value of the wages that employ. If the present rate of operators is $75 a month, the proportion whether or not their demand for higher wages is just naturally suggests an inquiry whether $50 have been fixed and striking rate from $ 000 a year ago or during the average of less than $75 can have been. From this point of view the case of the operators appeal to the discriminating. Investigation will probably show that $75 will not prove an excess $50 would at a year ago. In that case it will be necessary for the companies to prove that they have been overworked and underpaid all along in order to justify their present demand in whole or in part.

It must be assumed that a final determination of a controversy between corporations and employés which involves a suspension of the telegraph business of the country will not upon the public judgment wrong, will be made up in the merits of the case. There is a certain for the operators to prejudice the public against their side of the case by precipitancy. Irritation of the public is not calculated to secure public sympathy. The operators will stand a better chance with a policy of discussion, conciliation, and arbitration. Discussion will enable them to set forth their grievances as fully as to leave public recognition, and the telegraph companies cannot afford to antagonize the public sense of justice by refusing to submit the case to arbitration, to which representatives of business, the profession, and the country-at-large invite it. In such an arbitration the operators could rely with perfect confidence upon meeting the most favorable consideration for all their duties would commend to sympathetic and just.

THE BATTLE FOR RIVE LONDON.

The last few Citizens' Lyceum has forced the fight in defense of high license against the withdrawing settlement, which was an overwhelming and definite victory. Although the Common Council by the Mayor to support of its friends the saloonkeepers. The association submitted by the adversary of the Mayor to carefully and strongly drawn, and the issue to be tried is set forth in an unanimous manner. It declares to substance that the saloonkeepers who have taken out the $100 license under Carpenter's ordinance are being fortunate under a license which is wholly illegal and void.

The reasons assigned for declaring them illegal are familiar to the public, and they are approved by all reputable citizens. It is set forth that they were not applied for or issued in accordance with the law of the State or the ordinances of the city, but were secretly signed and secured on fortune favorite, and that they do not comply with the general law of the State in the manner of the issuance of licenses. Having thus the validity of the licenses, the complaint further charges that they were issued in accordance and violation of the State law, and with the intent to evade and prevent its enforcement. The complaint, therefore, is doubly strong. It not only states that the ordinance under which the licenses were issued is void, but that in the power to get them not before [illegible] the provisions of the law were not complied with, but were deliberately thrown aside as of no account.

Nothing has been left unreturned in the preparations of the prosecution. They have well established their case in light, but have taken the field in complete readiness for the issue. Their lawyers made their issue as strong as it is possible in order to put they have at the start their opponents a fair, open fight. It is to be a subject for note the Citizens' League on the one hand, backed by the respectable and shining classes of our citizens, and the saloon-keepers' Association on the other, backed by the disreputable portion of the community, the wholly element in the city [illegible], and the Mayor, who is the author of the ordinance that seeks to overthrow the law of the State. The result that long have the desires of the best citizens of Chicago will be watched with keen interest at every stage of the proceedings. The fact that the law has already been on the books and sure to be brought out in defense of law, of justice to the city, of good morals, and of our reputation as a community. The Citizens' League need not hesitate to push the fight for laws of decency and respect. They have the majority of the people of Chicago standing at their back, who will sign down to and adhere to their rights of decency.

A favorable decision in these suit cases will decide the fate of every license that has been issued by the city authorities under Carpenter's fraud ordinance and in defiance of the State law. If the Citizens' League is successful it will help to clean up hundreds of the low dens and close where vice and crime are bred, where the criminal classes are formed and rendezvous their victims, where men are robbed, and murdered, and accidents, and where our city's drunkenness and every form of beastly depravity is encouraged and practiced. It will detach the District's effort to keep down lawlessness, it will bring, as we have often said, more than a million dollars of revenue into the City Treasury, of which the State has sought to defraud the city. It will provide the necessary funds to improve the condition of our streets, to extend the advantages of the schools, to enlarge the police force, and to make every department of the city more effective. It will make the system fundamentally more orderly, and respectable, and it will not cost them, their just and unprejudiced decision to help us take care of the constitutions and properties which every supporting. It will touch the pocket of criminals and persons, and to the extent will save the city for much than the actual revenue from the license fees. All this hangs upon the success of the cases which now begun. The Tribune has no desire to overjudge the case, but it is clear as much as to submit the tangible and accurate of law, to suppress the evils arising from low forms, and to make the State for our right-minded and business success to pay during to the foreseeable chance of the exchequers of good citizens will rejoice.

THE LAST OF SUPERIOR.

There is something like a grim and almost merciless sentence in the report of the Common-in-Council to an Queen Isabella of Spain that she should offer to her powers for the northern Count de Crossford, but instead, who for so many years has played the weighty role of Pompeyer to the throne of Europe—long since gone into bidding repair—and handed to descent from the most distinguished family has ever turned the world—the House of Bourbon.

So long as it has to gather the House of Bourbon wrought nothing but evil, and wrought to evil and freedom. It has sown of princes into its ruthless. It has degraded even form of royalty to enforce to ridicule. It has imposed hard evil, abusive power to keep to subjects in ignorance and servile obedience while it robbed to heavy and rich. There is scarcely a number of its family who was not conspicuous for cruelty, immorality, or tyranny. Its very memory have gradually weakened its strength. The time of Queen has crept of its members until a mere handful are left, and these are so restricted and shorn of by the success of their predecessors that they are nonentities of terror. There is no more hopeful sign figures in the world of politics than "Queen V." letting its moth count of its [illegible] of Pretender, proving to the future—as of the house of the Bourbon line, and throw of gladness.

What honor carriage will history record, what revenge more complete, what verdict of more righteous than the sentence of the Common-in-Council according to Isabella the two grapes in behalf of the Bourbon Pretender? Who kindly grants exile from that [illegible] of Spain, driven from her own consent and throne by her vices, which are impure or vicious, an ancient tradition through European Capitals, and leaving on her person the corrupt which future have [illegible] of vermin? What grimness and—would engage the attention of the historical editor from that of [illegible] of Spain attempting to pray for the throne to Cromwell? What more pitiable than the facile, impotent efforts of these ancient remnants of a useless race to suggest and concede each other, without a country, without a throne, the last of a repugnant family, without in its composition and mixed with [illegible]? The world will be better when they are all gone and it is against the opportunities of a few individuals that seem to have left for a time only as a warning how thoroughly future generations can [illegible], and how terribly the penalties. There is nothing of the race left worth preserving or saving for, and the record is a noble ground and out of right the latter for the world, in which it has done nothing that did not able to be borne or provide for shame.

SUNDAY AND DISSOLUTION.

It is worth at least moral notice that in the irresistible struggle that now appears to be impending between the telegraph capital necessarily and the telegraph labor necessarily [illegible] the latter depends for success that has no representative whatever. It is the people—not the telegraph company—that really pays the wages of the operators. It is the people that furnishes the necessary with which the dividends of the shareholders are paid. It is the people that will be most seriously affected by the outbreak of the strike now. There will be more trouble to the public than to the operators. The public is heard of business [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

[Special Correspondence of The Chicago Tribune.]

LONDON, June 17, 1865.

The Hon. Mr. Cobden first gave a banquet at the Reform Club, Liverpool, at which Mr. Joseph Chamberlain, one of the late Radical Members of the House, presided. The principal guests of honor were Cobden, Lord Arthur Russell, and Lord Stanley of Alderley, the latter two having been members of the Liverpool Reform Club. Mr. Chamberlain has been elected Mayor of Birmingham for two years in succession, and is the most popular man and most influential citizen in that town. The attendance was not unusually large, from the assertion, during these times, of the principle of the Conservative Lords Derby, Stanley, and Cranborne, and the Liberal supporters, as it is called, Mr. Horsman, Mr. W. E. Forster, and Mr. Milner Gibson.
